STATUTES

13	Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c)	11
----	-----------------------------	----

1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 To simplify issues for this Court, Frances Agnew DBA Fran Calista, Fran 3 Calista Closet LLC, All Things Ali, LLC, ORC Shop LLC, Alison Rae Reaster, 4 Brooke L. Hunsucker dba Brooke Leann Allen, Bailey Renae Miller, Jeffrey Francis 5 Moore and Colson Ty Agnew (collectively “Defendants”) submit this modest 6 overview and associated proposals to counter broad, overreaching, unnecessary, and 7 improper injunctive relief sought by Patagonia Inc. (“Plaintiff” or “Patagonia”).

8 Plaintiff asks this Court for the extraordinary remedy of a preliminary 9 injunction, along with sweeping ancillary relief such as expedited discovery and a 10 freeze of Defendants’ assets. This request is overreaching and unsupported by the 11 required showing under federal law. Plaintiff’s motion fails at the most fundamental 12 level: it has not demonstrated any imminent irreparable harm that cannot be 13 remedied by money damages. Courts have long held that purely economic injuries 14 are not irreparable, because “the possibility that adequate compensatory or other 15 corrective relief will be available at a later date, in the ordinary course of litigation, 16 weighs heavily against a claim of irreparable harm.” Sampson v. Murray 415 U.S.
17 61, 90 (1974).

18 Here, any alleged harm to Plaintiff – if strictly proven - could be fully 19 compensated by monetary damages should it prevail. There is no evidentiary basis 20 in the record for the Court to conclude Defendants are somehow unable or unwilling 21 to satisfy a judgment, if one is issued. Plaintiff’s lack of evidence reveals no threat 22 of immediate injury that cannot await trial. Equally fatal to Patagonia’s requested 23 relief is its overbreadth. It is a basic principle that any injunctive relief must be 24 “narrowly tailored to remedy the specific harm shown.” Bresgal v. Brock, 843 F.2d 25 1163, 1170 (9th Cir. 1987)

26 Plaintiff’s proposed order flouts this principle, amounting to asking the Court 27 here for punitive measures, rather than a carefully calibrated and necessary remedy.
28 For example, Plaintiff seeks to freeze Defendants’ assets and force expedited

1 discovery absent any evidence that Defendants are hiding assets or that normal 2 discovery would be inadequate – measures traditionally reserved for extraordinary 3 cases. The law does not countenance such overreaching where, as here, there is no 4 evidence in the record suggesting any deliberate asset concealment or depletion.

5 Notably, Defendants have voluntarily offered to stipulate to an order 6 maintaining that status quo during the litigation. In other words, Defendants are 7 willing to refrain from any alleged use of Plaintiff’s marks and cessation of alleged 8 conduct while this case is pending and provide any assurances to Plaintiff, whether 9 it be a stipulation as part of a settlement, or a stipulated injunction. This voluntary 10 cessation and willingness to reach an agreement on the same underscores the lack of 11 any alleged ongoing harm. Thus, the extreme relief Plaintiff requests not only fails 12 to meet the stringent legal standard, but it is also wholly unnecessary to protect any 13 legitimate interest. For these reasons, and as explained further below, the Court 14 should deny Plaintiff’s motion for a preliminary injunction and accompanying 15 ancillary relief.

16 In the alternative, again if the Court perceives any need for injunctive 17 measures, Defendants respectfully request that the relief be limited to narrower 18 measures that address specific alleged harms – for example, entry of a narrowly 19 tailored stipulated order embodying Defendants’ commitments to cease the alleged 20 conduct, rather than the sweeping and unwarranted injunction Plaintiff proposes. A 21 stipulated or consented injunction need not (and should not) include findings of fact 22 on the record.

23 Such a tailored approach would serve to protect Plaintiff’s alleged rights at 24 this stage while avoiding undue, overreaching, unwarranted, improper, and 25 unnecessary harm to Defendants. The core principle that injunctions are an 26 extraordinary remedy to be used sparingly and only to the extent truly necessary 27 should be applied here.

1 II. BACKGROUND

2 (This section is abbreviated given the Court's familiarity with the record and 3 because Patagonia's motion fails primarily on legal grounds. This section also will 4 not detail what this Court is already aware of regarding service issues related to 5 Defendants, improper service and lack thereof, and improper notice given to 6 Defendants previously). Plaintiff filed this action alleging trademark infringement 7 and related claims arising from Defendants' alleged use of marks allegedly similar 8 to Patagonia's.

9 In their haste to put extreme pressure on Defendants (perhaps for settlement 10 purposes or for litigation posture), Plaintiff is requesting extreme measures – 11 unsupported by evidence - which are wholly unnecessary since Defendants have 12 been nothing but cooperative and committed to a swift resolution of this matter.
13 Defendants could only recently retain counsel Friday before Memorial Day 14 weekend, days after a hearing which they had to attend themselves without counsel, 15 as this Court is aware.

16 Despite Plaintiff's extreme demands, Defendants have cooperated despite 17 their being improperly served (with service expiring before the relevant deadline or 18 never having been made on various Defendants). Defendants have taken immediate 19 concrete steps to address Plaintiff's concerns despite only being provided with case 20 documents that counsel could not even access because they were under seal the 21 Friday before a long weekend. Defendants still cannot even access the full file 22 because the case is still currently under seal. Defendants and their counsel are still 23 getting up to speed on the case, only a week or so into a mess of Plaintiff's own 24 creation in terms of service, inadequate notice and insufficient time to meaningfully 25 respond.

26 Despite limited time to review case documents, Defendants agreed to 27 ameliorate any of Plaintiff's concerns regarding the alleged conduct, and are even 28 fine with a reasonably narrowed, consented injunction. Defendants have

1 communicated to Plaintiff – and reiterate to this Court – their willingness to 2 stipulate to injunctive relief or cessation of the alleged conduct by agreement. In 3 short, there is no ongoing “infringement” to enjoin: the alleged conduct Patagonia 4 seeks to stop has already stopped, and Defendants are more than willing to 5 cooperate to ameliorate any remaining concerns pending trial.

6 What remains is a dispute over past conduct (for which Plaintiff seeks 7 monetary damages) and an assurance against future “infringement” (which 8 Defendants have already offered). Despite these facts and Defendant’s overtures 9 and offers, Plaintiff presses forward, insisting on a broad undue injunction and 10 extraordinary asset freeze measures without demonstrating the prerequisites for such 11 relief under federal law.

12 III. ARGUMENT

13 A. Purely Economic Harm is Not Irreparable

14 Patagonia’s primary claims of harm appear to center on economic injury – for 15 example, lost sales or market share due to Defendants’ supposed infringement. Such 16 injuries, even if proven, do not constitute irreparable harm because they are 17 compensable by money damages. The law on this point is well-settled. The Ninth 18 Circuit has held that economic injury alone does not constitute irreparable harm 19 because monetary losses can be recovered through damages at final judgment. In 20 Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Canyon Television & Appliance Rental, Inc., for example, the 21 Ninth Circuit emphasized that purely monetary harms are usually not irreparable 22 since an award of damages can make the plaintiff whole. Rent-A-Center, Inc. v.
23 Canyon Television & Appliance Rental, Inc., 944 F.2d 597, 603 (9th Cir. 1991) 24 (affirming denial of injunction; injury to business could be compensated by money).

25 Likewise, the Supreme Court in Sampson v. Murray made clear that “[t]he 26 possibility that adequate compensatory or other corrective relief will be available 27 at a later date...weighs heavily against a claim of irreparable harm.” 415 U.S. at 28 90 (emphasis added). That is exactly what is present here. In short, if Plaintiff can

1 strictly prove that Defendants’ past conduct caused it financial harm, the court can 2 award an appropriate sum of damages – a complete and adequate remedy at law that 3 precludes preliminary injunctive relief.

4 Here, Plaintiff has not identified any harm that cannot be quantified in dollars.
5 Plaintiff’s allegations of harm boil down to garden variety assertions that 6 Defendants’ use of similar branding or trademarks could divert some sales or tarnish 7 Patagonia’s brand value. To the extent this translates to lost revenue or profits for 8 Patagonia, those losses can be calculated. Patagonia is a sophisticated business that 9 can, through evidence – if it has any – determine, the financial impact, if any, of 10 Defendants’ alleged activities, and be compensated (if monetary damages can be 11 proven) at trial. Even claimed damage to “goodwill” or “reputation” – often cited in 12 intellectual property cases as a form of intangible harm – must be proven with 13 evidence and cannot be presumed irreparable on mere say-so. See Herb Reed, 736 14 F.3d 1239, 1250 (2013) (vacating injunction; to establish irreparable harm, 15 “conclusory or speculative allegations” of lost goodwill are not enough).

16 Patagonia offers only speculation that Defendants’ limited alleged conduct 17 has caused it any brand harm. Notably, Patagonia has not produced any concrete 18 evidence of consumer confusion, loss of customer loyalty, or other tangible impact 19 to its reputation. In the absence of such proof, courts will not credit claims of 20 irreparable harm. Id. at 1250–51 (plaintiff’s “platitudes” about harm to goodwill 21 were insufficient where no concrete evidence of injury was presented).

22 Furthermore, even if Patagonia were concerned about difficulty in quantifying 23 certain harms (like long-term erosion of brand strength), the appropriate course 24 would be to seek that calculation through expert testimony at trial, not to assume 25 irreparable harm now with no evidence. Patagonia is an established company for 26 whom any marginal impact of Defendants’ alleged actions would be, in relative 27 terms, small and measurable (if it even exists at all). There is no indication that 28 Defendants’ alleged infringement has caused any irreversible damage to Patagonia’s

1 business that couldn't be redressed by a damages award.

2 In sum, Patagonia has an adequate future remedy at law – money damages –
3 should it ultimately prevail. That fact alone is fatal to the request for preliminary 4 injunction and upholding of any overbroad injunctive relief as it pertains to bank 5 accounts or assets as to Defendants. When legal remedies are sufficient, equity 6 should not step in. Because Patagonia has not shown (and cannot show) that any 7 harm it faces is beyond the reach of ordinary monetary relief, it has not met its 8 burden of establishing irreparable harm. This Court should deny the injunction on 9 that ground alone.

10 B. There Is No Evidence of Imminent or Ongoing Harm – Defendants
11 Have Already Agreed to Cease the Challenged Conduct Negating
12 the Need for Injunctive Relief

13 Even apart from the adequacy of damages, Plaintiff's motion fails because it 14 cannot demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely to occur absent an injunction.
15 The record shows no ongoing violation or impending threat that needs to be 16 enjoined. To the contrary, Defendants have indicated to Plaintiff, and indicate again 17 to this Court, in no uncertain terms their willingness to abide by any cessation of 18 alleged activities. In short, Plaintiff is seeking to enjoin a phantom – conduct that is 19 not occurring and that Defendants have agreed will not occur while the case is 20 pending. Courts do not issue preliminary injunctions under such circumstances, 21 because there is no irreparable harm on the horizon to prevent.

22 The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to prevent future injury before a 23 final judgment can be reached. A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy 24 never awarded as of right. In each case, courts “must balance the competing claims 25 of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding 26 of the requested relief. In exercising their sound discretion, courts of equity should 27 pay particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary 28 remedy of injunction. Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S.

1 Ct. (2008).

2 If the defendant has already ceased and/or agreed to cease the challenged 3 conduct and there is no reasonable likelihood that it will resume in the immediate 4 future, then the plaintiff cannot show that it is “likely to suffer irreparable harm in 5 the absence of an injunction.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 20.

6 Here, Defendants’ agreed cessation as to any alleged use of Patagonia’s 7 marks (and any even confusingly similar branding) is bona fide and in good faith.
8 Defendants have gone so far as to offer a stipulation – even a formal, binding 9 promise to approved by the Court – to refrain from the alleged conduct that 10 Patagonia seeks to prohibit. That offer is essentially the functional equivalent of a 11 preliminary injunction, voluntarily undertaken.

12 If Plaintiff’s true aim is to prevent ongoing infringement and other trademark 13 issues, that aim is already accomplished by Defendants’ cessation and willingness to 14 be bound. Plaintiffs has not suggested that Defendants are presently infringing or 15 that they will do so tomorrow absent a court order; at most Plaintiff speculates that, 16 without an injunction, Defendants might resume the behavior at some indefinite 17 time. Such speculation is insufficient.

18 Plaintiff here has a broad burden which they have not met. See Garcia v.
19 Google, Inc., 786 F.3d 733, 740 (9th Cir. 2015) (plaintiff’s burden is “doubly 20 demanding” if seeking mandatory injunction). Additionally, as previously detailed, 21 the harm they have alleged is clearly capable of compensation in damages. Marlyn 22 Nutraceuticals, Inc. v. Mucos Pharma GmbH & Co., 571 F3d 873, 879 (9th Cir.
23 2009) (Mandatory injunctive relief is “particularly disfavored” and will not be 24 granted unless extreme or very serious harm will result, not capable of 25 compensation in damages, if the injunction is not issued)

26 All Plaintiff has done is suggest that if injunctive relief is not granted, that 27 they may face some future harm. However, that falls far short of the burden they are 28 required to carry here. “To support injunctive relief, harm must not only be

1 irreparable, it must be imminent; establishing a threat of irreparable harm in the 2 indefinite future is not enough. Rather, a plaintiff must demonstrate immediate 3 threatened injury as a prerequisite to preliminary injunctive relief.” Caribbean
4 Marine Servs. Co., Inc. v. Baldrige, 844 F.2d 668, 674 (9th Cir.1988) (emphasis 5 added) see also Amylin Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 456 F. App’x 676, 6 679 (9th Cir. 2011)(“[E]stablishing a threat of irreparable harm in the indefinite 7 future is not enough.”); Hanginout, Inc. v. Google, Inc., 54 F. Supp. 3d 1109, 1132
8 (S.D. Cal. 2014) (“Speculative future harm is insufficient.”).

9 Instead of seeking relief from this Court based on speculative future harm, 10 Plaintiff should agree to a stipulated order or agreement with Defendants (that 11 Defendants would be more than willing to sign, again alone, or as part of 12 settlement). Such a stipulated injunction need not include any findings of fact, 13 which Plaintiff may attempt to prove at trial (to the extent it has supporting 14 evidence). Defendants contend there is zero need for any court intervention here to 15 prevent any future alleged conduct, since Defendants already are willing to 16 cooperate with Plaintiff; but Defendants are still open to the Court entering a narrow 17 tailored injunction. However, it seems as though, at this point, Plaintiff’s tactics are 18 to attempt to intimidate Defendants with the threat of “punishment” through an 19 injunction, as opposed to working cooperatively with Defendants. This Court 20 should see through those tactics.

21 Furthermore, relief sought in the preliminary injunction is far too over broad 22 as it pertains to assets and shutting down various accounts. Damages can be assessed 23 at trial. There is no risk of any depletion of assets, there is no flight risk of any kind 24 for Defendants. Defendants are in the US, have appeared in this case, retained 25 counsel, and are defending this suit. There is therefore no provided justification for 26 an asset freeze, or freezing access to Defendants bank accounts, which is extreme 27 relief, and as detailed above, wholly unnecessary here before trial. There is no 28 indication that Defendants will not or cannot pay any damages should they be

1 proven at trial. There is simply no evidence supporting the extreme relief Plaintiff 2 requests.

3 Patagonia effectively seeks to have Defendants’ assets frozen during the 4 pendency of this case, ostensibly to ensure that any judgment in Patagonia’s favor 5 can be satisfied. The relief requested is extreme and unwarranted under the 6 circumstances. The Supreme Court has held that, except in certain narrow 7 categories of cases, federal courts have no general authority to freeze a defendant’s 8 assets before judgment merely to secure potential money damages. Grupo Mexicano
9 de Desarrollo, S.A. v. Alliance Bond Fund, Inc., 527 U.S. 308, 333 (1999)
10 (emphasis added). In Grupo Mexicano, the Court reversed a prejudgment asset 11 freeze, explaining that such a remedy was historically unavailable in suits for money 12 damages and thus beyond the court’s equitable power in a purely legal action. Id. at 13 333 (“the District Court lacked authority to issue a preliminary injunction 14 preventing [the defendant] from disposing of assets pending adjudication of 15 [plaintiff’s] contract claim for money damages” because that remedy was not 16 traditionally accorded by equity).

17 This case is no different. To the extent Plaintiff primarily seeks alleged 18 damages or equitable accounting of alleged profits, that can ultimately be paid from 19 whatever assets exist at judgment. There is no proof whatsoever that this is a limited 20 fund case or that Defendants are insolvent, or that there is a flight risk or of 21 depletion of assets. Plaintiff essentially wants an attachment without following 22 attachment procedures or meeting the strict requirements for such relief.

23 The inclusion of such provisions is a telltale sign of overbreadth and improper 24 purpose. Plaintiff is effectively trying to use the vehicle of a preliminary injunction 25 to gain advantages (security for a potential money judgment, and early discovery) 26 that it is not entitled to under the ordinary rules, let alone under the relief sought and 27 lack of evidence provided by Plaintiff. This is an abuse of the Court’s power to issue 28 injunctive relief.

1 Additionally, discovery here can be conducted in normal course. There is no
2 demonstrated urgent need for early discovery. Defendants are entitled to conduct 3 and respond to discovery on a normal timeline. There is no need for Court 4 intervention on those grounds, nor is there any evidence that Defendants have 5 withheld or will withhold evidence they are required to produce, thereby obviating 6 any Court intervention at this point. Simply put, the relief sought is premature, 7 unwarranted inasmuch as there is no supporting evidence, and unnecessary.

8 C. Plaintiff's Self-Serving Statements and Assertions

9 Plaintiff also relies solely on the statutory presumption of irreparable harm, 10 providing no evidence or explanation as to why any harm it may suffer would be 11 irreparable. Even assuming the applicability of the statutory presumption, 12 “conclusory statements and theoretical arguments supporting such harm are 13 insufficient to show a likelihood that such harm will be likely, substantial, and 14 immediate.” Ontel Prods. Corp. v. Brownstone Res., LLC, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS
15 158225, *1 (C.D. Cal. August 20, 2021); Cazorla v. Hughes, No. CV-14-02112 16 MMM (CWx), 2014 WL 12235425, at *19 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 7, 2014) (“Conclusory 17 affidavits are insufficient to demonstrate irreparable harm.”) (citing Am. Passage 18 Media Corp. v. Cass Commc'ns, Inc., 750 F.2d 1470, 1473 (9th Cir. 1985)).

19 In Ontel, the court there explained that the rebuttable presumption only 20 extends so far; for a movant to expand beyond it, it must support its claim of 21 irreparable harm with “concrete evidence.” Id.; see also Hoist Fitness Sys., Inc. v.
22 TuffStuff Fitness Int'l, Inc., No. 5:17-cv-01388 AB(KKx), 2017 WL 5640562, at *3 23 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 31, 2017) (“The unsupported, conclusory assertions of the movant’s 24 CEO are simply not sufficient”). Because the movant in that case provided no 25 evidentiary support for its allegations of loss of reputation and goodwill, its motion 26 for a temporary restraining order was denied. Ontel, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158225, 27 *19; see also Marine Servs. Co. v. Baldrige, 844 F.2d 668, 674 (9th Cir. 1988) 28 (“[s]peculative injury does not constitute irreparable injury sufficient to warrant

1 granting a preliminary injunction”).

2 The only other evidence that Plaintiff has identified is supported by only self-3 serving declaration(s) that are prepared by their own attorneys and staff. A 4 conclusory and self-serving declaration by an individual associated with Plaintiff’s 5 company is, standing alone, weak evidence of irreparable harm (let alone evidence 6 submitted by Plaintiff’s counsel). Compare VBS Distrib., Inc. v. Nutrivita Labs., 7 Inc., No. SACV 16-01553-CJCDFMX, 2017 WL 2404919, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 19, 8 2017) (insufficient showing where plaintiff “offered only the self-serving 9 declaration of its CEO”), rev’d on other grounds, 697 F. App’x 543 (9th Cir. 2017);
10 with SolarEdge Techs. Inc. v. Enphase Energy, Inc., No. 17-CV-04047-YGR, 2017 11 WL 3453378, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2017) (“bare, threshold showing” of 12 irreparable harm where plaintiff offered sworn statement of senior executive but no 13 data to support her conclusions).

14 D. Defendants Are Entitled to a Proper Bond

15 Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c), the Court may issue a preliminary 16 injunction “only if [plaintiff] gives security in an amount that the court considers 17 proper to pay the costs and damages sustained” by defendant if it is wrongfully 18 enjoined. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c) (emphasis added). The purpose of the bond 19 requirement is “to protect the enjoined party’s interest in the event that future 20 proceedings show the injunction issued wrongfully.” Apple, Inc. v. Samsung Elecs.
21 Co., 877 F. Supp. 2d 838, 918 (N.D. Cal. 2012).

22 If the Court were to consider an injunction in part, Defendants still 23 respectfully request an opportunity to submit full briefing on the issuance of a bond 24 and the proper amount thereof. Plaintiff’s request of $5,000 is outrageous 25 considering the extreme measures they are seeking against Defendants that have 26 already to this point been implemented, including freezing bank accounts and assets.

1 IV. CONCLUSION

2 Defendants contend that the entirety of the injunctive relief sought by Plaintiff 3 is overbroad inappropriate and completely unwarranted for the reasons explained 4 herein. However, if this Court is inclined to uphold some portions of the injunctive 5 relief requested, Defendants are alternatively willing to consent to a limited, 6 narrowly tailored, and stipulated injunction, without findings of fact on the record.
